

Creating Contracts

For me, creating contracts and asking people to sign them was one of those “big girl panties” things to do. It felt almost as hard to ask someone to sign a contract as it was to ask for that next higher price tag. There was a part of me that insisted I did not need one, reminded me that I’d never needed one before and asking for one triggered my imposter syndrome. I think it also comes to anyone carrying Priestess wounding. We have been underground for sooo long, it goes hand in hand with stage fright and being seen in too big of a space. Breathe deeply and trust dear sister.

I do recommend them on larger amounts of money and on payment plans. Contracts keep you and your client clear about the cost, payment plan and deliverables (what they receive from you) It can be an amazing amplifier of trust, excitement and commitment too. If it feels uncomfortable then just do it anyway and it’ll get easier!

Here’s a sample of a contract that I use for 1 on 1 sessions.
