Being curious
not only
means you
find out
things, it
makes you
more attractive.

Your people
appreciate your interest.

And...

When you're curious about
yourself, you
notice things,
consider
things, and grow.

Curiosity is a valuable asset
to the Kind leader for themselves, as well as others.

When you ask questions of others. Kind,
supportive,
interested
questions, they consider them.

And they grow -
often without realising.

What's more...

They feel
valued and
appreciated.

They feel
nurtured.

And when they
feel that way,
they are engaged and
like to stay
and grow.

And contribute
more.

Taking the time
to be curious is a kind leader
skill to be valued, even if it might seem a luxury.

As a leader,
being curious
about yourself
and others is one of the
kindest things
you can do.

C U R I O S I T Y W O R K S H E E T

Three steps you can take today.

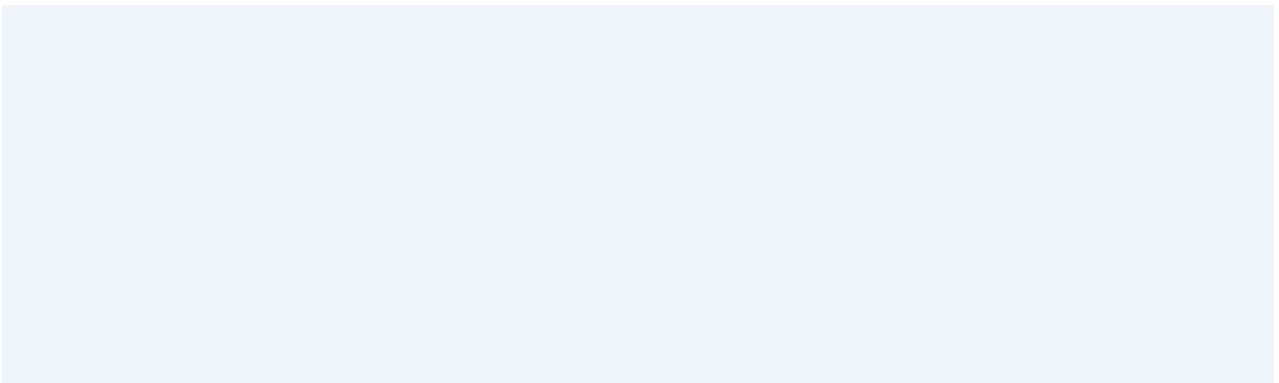

1. Ask yourself a curious question about yourself today.

2. Be gently curious about something in one of your people.

3. Follow up on something someone says with a 2nd question.
