introduction

These demonstrations were recorded in 2007 as part of series of “bring a client” days where therapist could invite one of their clients to have a session with me with the aim to provide an additional perspective.

The participants generously gave permission to allow other therapist to have access to these recordings as an opportunity to contribute to their learning.

The sessions are offered as an opportunity for any interested therapist to observe me working, not as examples of a right or best approach, but simply as an opportunity to add to their options.

I did not follow up any of the participants, so I have no way of knowing whether the experiences were useful or not.

I trust that when you view these sessions, you can find something in the experience that can add to your learning by appreciating something that you observe, or noticing something that seems unhelpful so you can explore the opposite option.
