

Your Private Practice Life

Just dream here. You're probably much more likely to imagine having less of what you want is realistic when you can have what you really want.

Imagine your job is gone.

You see between 10 & 26 clients per week. Pick the number that feels right for you.

You take time off when you want to take time off. No asking permission. No productivity requirements. Kid's field trip? No problem. Your own regular midday therapy? Yep. 2 weeks off at the end of the year? Sure!

You spend no more than 4 hours on the non-clinical side of running your business every week.

You are getting paid enough to put money in savings, put money in retirement, take vacations, get your favorite CEU's, take whatever yoga or photography or other fun class you want to take. You can donate to causes you believe in. You can pay your bills without checking your bank account.

You can choose to work with only the clients you know you do great work with. Your work days are spent with clients making progress.

I want you to know all of this is not just possible among therapists in private practice; it's common. We have helped thousands of therapists have this life. Check out abundanceparty.com if you need help getting there.
